Applied Energy Products – Helping To Meet The Standard

The Decent Homes Standard is a complex and evolving directive, which is already having a wide reaching effect on organisations and individuals who supply to the social housing sector. Keeping up with and understanding its implications is essential but time consuming, and therefore Applied Energy Products has launched a new resource to help.

Part of the Decent Homes Support Package, the Decent Homes Standard Roadshow is a series of information seminars, designed to explain to housing professionals how they can meet the Standard.

Taking place throughout May, the Roadshow is touring prestigious stadiums across England, including the Manchester United and Chelsea grounds. Each event is Continual Professional Development (CPD) approved and certificates will be awarded for attending. There will even be the opportunity to take a guided tour of the stadium!

By attending a seminar, delegates will be able to learn more about the Decent Homes Standard and understand how it will affect them. There will also be the opportunity to discover how Applied Energy Products' expertise in providing heating, ventilation and showering products can help organisations to meet the Standard.

Decent Homes Standard manager, Chris Tait, said, "Meeting the Decent Homes Standard doesn't have to be a task that is undertaken alone. Applied Energy Products understands what needs to be done to conform to the legislation and through its brands, Creda, Xpelair and Redring, is in a unique position to offer advice and expertise."
